CLAPTRAP

"Claptrap was created as both a nod to a friend of mine who designed Pixar's Wall-E character, and my own personal challenge to design the most generic robot I could think of," says concept artist Lorin Wood. "I like to think I was successful."

"I was working on another project at the time and did the initial sketch that started it all, and named him Zippy." I posted that in our database system as a joke. When I was pulled onto Borderlands, the art director, Brian Martin, saw the sketch and loved it. I fleshed out his design in meetings with Brian as we acted out his behaviors and developed a personality. Some of those details, such as articulated eyebrows, were removed before we went to the modeling phase. It was added to in updates by David Eddings (when he provided the voice) and our fantastic animators."
